The crew on board the Endeavour caught and ate so many stingrays where they first stopped in Australia that Captain Cook thought the place should be called ‘Sting-ray Bay’. The Gweagal people who lived there called the area Kamay. They also used to eat stingrays, which they called daringyal. Sting-ray Bay was later renamed Botany Bay and is now part of the Kamay Botany Bay National Park.